We Bring Sympathy into Public Spaces with Art and Practical Conversation

Help Each Other Out is a growing collective of people having an idea that being there for others is often easier than we think and that it matters. Its founder is Dr. Kelsey Crowe, who received her PhD in social work from the University of California, Berkeley. Her personal story includes being isolated in difficult times and shying away from others in their time of need and has brought her to do this work. She knew ignoring friends wasn't the right thing to do, but didn't know what to do instead. So she conducted loads of social science research how to support people through hard times in life, and founded Help Each Other Out to build community to share her experience.

What we believe in is

- The Courage To Try is 80% of the job.
- Small Gestures Really Count.
- Being There can fit all personality types and busy schedules.

What is our approach?

IIPA: Inspiring, Informed, Practical, and Adaptable

Inspiring: We use art, design, and people's simple stories to express the million forms of Being There.

Informed: We develop our website and workshops with an editorial eye informed by research.

Practical: We help to express compassion and sympathy every day and feel most excited by any information that can be used to support people.

Adaptable: Our advice can be adapted for your skills and range of relationships that extend from family all the way to any man on the planet. It's for you.
